Earth Day

Earth Day was first celebrated in the United States on April 22, 1970. It began as a way for people to see the need for cleaning up the earth's air and water and for saving natural resources. Today Earth Day is not only celebrated in the United States, but in many countries throughout the world.

The idea of Earth Day came from then Senator Gaylord Nelson from Wisconsin. He noticed that waste and pollution from factories and mills was harming the earth. In 1970 he came up with the idea to devote a day to the earth by talking to students in order to make them aware of the problems of water pollution, acid rain, and smog. This day was very successful and has been celebrated ever since.

Earth Day is celebrated in many ways. Planting trees, picking up trash along the road, and running recycling and conservation programs are just some of the ways Earth Day is celebrated. Many people ride bikes to work or school to save gas and reduce pollution. School children learn about Earth Day in their classrooms and participate in special recycling programs.
